

MAJ Amy Thrasher is a clinical and aeromedical psychologist, currently completing a post-doctoral fellowship in health psychology, a specialty that applies principles of behavioral health to the prevention, management, and treatment of medical issues. In her next assignment, she will be the program director for TAMC's Clinical Psychology Internship Program (CPIP).

MAJ Thrasher holds a BA in English and sociology from Augustana College, an MA in counseling from Seton Hall University, and a doctorate in psychology from Adler University. She completed her clinical psychology training at Walter Reed National Military Medical Center. In previous assignments, she has served as the chief of inpatient psychology and deputy chief of the Clark EBH Clinic at Womack Army Medical Center, (North Carolina); embedded behavioral health officer for 18th Military Police Brigade (Vilseck, Germany); and forward behavioral health Officer-in-Charge in western Iraq (Al Asad, Al Qaim, Taji). MAJ Thrasher has many research interests including sleep medicine, command-behavioral health integration, therapeutic value of human-animal interactions, and yoga applications in health and wellness.

